Dear Mr. Davis,

Amy has done just about all that is possible.

She is also somewhat tired, from her appearance, and I suspect a little frustrated by the difficulty of locating several of the records.

They had in some cases been shifted by the FBI, without serial identification, and in two instances she had to make page-by-page searches. Volume by volume.

In the course of checking the documents index she noticed a second similar but possibly irrelevant record. I told her to make a copy of it on the off chance it might interest you.

The New Orleans record you refer to in your letter of the 30th was particularly hard to locate because we have no New Orleans cross-reference worksheets. I'd thought I did. The closest thing, hopefully the right thing, is enclosed.

There may be a mail collection yet tonight at a box near the college. If there isn't there will be a collection there tomorrow and her mailing it tonight without any explanatuon will save a day in reaching you. Or should.

One page of the New Orleans record was not provided. She did not overlook it in making the copies.

She finally got this by a page-by-page check of the very large FBIHQ Ruby file.

She is addressing the envelope while I type this and she has been here four hours.

Sincerely,

Harold Weisberg
